Specifically, [REDACTED] was interested in coverage of the proceedings of the Arab League which was in conference. An original announcement of the final statement approved by the Arab League had been received by [REDACTED] which was quite contrary to that which was expected. Through the [REDACTED] we were able to obtain a statement broadcast from Beirut which was quite a different version from the official announcement.

[REDACTED] stated that this information was especially valuable, that it was entirely different from any information they had received from any other source, and it was being used practically as their bible on current discussions of proceedings of the Arab League.
